

Side Notes: This has always been one of my all time favorites because of the simple message that it teaches. I first learned this song as a young child in primary and the message that always stuck with me is that I had received many blessings, so I should give back to others. I've learned over the years that the more I give back and help others, the more that good things seem to happen to me and my family. When we make an effort to help another person for the right reasons, with no expectation of something in return, it always seems to work out so that we end up with more than we started with. Blessings come in surprising ways... they sometimes come months or years later, but helping, sharing and serving others always produces an amazing return on investment.
