Side Notes: In a town in southern France in 1843, the church organ had recently been renovated. To celebrate this, the parish priest asked the poet Placide Cappaeau, who had grown up in the area, to write a Christmas poem. Soon afterwards, Adolphe Adam composed the music. It was translated into English in 1855 by John Sullivan Dwight and soon became a popular Christmas song. While I was coming up with this arrangement, I kept returning to Beethoven's "Ode to Joy" tune and felt like they should be together for this book. Hopefully it adds a unique twist to two familiar tunes as you play them.
