Side Notes: This was a simple, short, original tune I put together that I thought could be used as a background track to a movie or documentary. I tried to keep the chords simple but create enough movement in the melody to keep it interesting. Sometimes the most beautiful music is the most simple. Often times when people add multiple parts and levels it can become so busy that it can sometimes take the beauty out of the music. I think our lives can often be the same. We sometimes get to the a point where we add so many good things that it can actually make it hard for us to pay attention to the things that matter most in our life that are often the most precious and special things. Make sure you don't miss the beauty in the basic, simple things that matter most.
